

National Severe Weather Warning Service

Chief Forecasters Assessment

Following the eastwards clearance of the frontal system on Tuesday, a cold and unstable westerly airstream is expected to follow across northern and central parts of the UK which will persist through Tuesday night into early Wednesday. This will bring snow showers with accumulations in places.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Snow

Valid from 12:00 on Tue, 11th Feb 2014 until 10:00 on Wed, 12th Feb 2014

Showers will turn increasingly to snow on Tuesday, even down to low levels, and will continue through Tuesday night and into Wednesday morning. Accumulations of 2-5 cm are likely on ground above about 150-200 m with perhaps 10 cm or more above 300 m especially in the west of Scotland, Northern Ireland and northern England. On low ground, lying snow will tend to melt between showers by day but 1-3 cm may settle on Tuesday evening and night. Icy stretches will also reform in the evening, these lasting well into Wednesday morning. The public should be aware of the risk of some travel disruption and difficult driving conditions.
